NASIG

inclusiveness::

NASIG ensures that each member has equal standing in the organization. We encourage membership and engagement from throughout the serials community through individual memberships. At conference sessions, committee meetings, and on the Executive Board, you will find people from all sectors of membership, at different career stages, and from all over North America.

connections::

NASIG's greatest strength is the opportunity for networking. Members include librarians, publishers, vendors, educators, database producers, library systems representatives, and others in the serials environment. Members are involved in the creation, production, delivery, management, preservation, and access of serial information, the scholarly communication process and emerging technologies.

“Given the many challenges of managing electronic resources, the NASIG conference is a great source for tapping into new ideas. Together we can build services that meet the needs of the dynamic electronic environment.”

– Christine Stamison, Subscription Agent

participation::

What makes NASIG unique also makes your involvement and support vital to NASIG's future. As a volunteer organization we rely on dedicated and enthusiastic members to share our vision and continue our work. NASIG is led by an elected Executive Board, while standing committees and special working groups carry out the work of NASIG, thus providing service opportunities for NASIG members.

annual conference::

The NASIG annual conference provides attendees the opportunity to consider and discuss the diverse and ever-changing landscape of the serials community. The meeting features presentations from industry leaders and facilitates learning and thoughtful discourse for professionals at every stage of their career. Members receive a significant discount on registration.

“As a publisher I can say that NASIG provides an invaluable opportunity to understand the issues important to libraries. In turn, this allows us to offer mutually beneficial resources to the library community.”

– Jenni Wilson, Publisher Representative
